JUST when you thought the great sealing debate was over, along comes the Zork.

The purists who could not make the jump from cork to screw tops now have another concept to contend with.

I struck this Zork on a bottle of the Red Knot Cabernet Sauvignon — a drop of spectacular value in the under $15 range.

The Zork will not only let you re-plug the bottle (not that one often wants to do that) — but it is also recyclable.

This device promises the best of both worlds — acting like a cork but eliminating spoilage caused by bad corks.

Putting curiosity about this seal to one side, the Red Knot cab sav hails from the Adelaide Hills and it recently snagged a silver at a New Zealand international wine show.

It is an intense red which rewards the drinker with a wonderfully complex palate, given the price range.
